The solo show of Selina Baumann at Åplus Berlin presents a body of works at the threshold between the enclosed space - or so suggested to be perceived - of A Garden populated by ceramic volumes and the wider realm of references that those plastic shapes and organic forms evoke.

Selina Baumann's sculptures construct an all embracing installation in the spaces of the gallery so the landscape - a garden of organic, ancestral shapes, - awakes the senses, the signifier's form perception, lust, atavistic resemblances and the fascination for totemic figures.

The garden is populated by a group of volumes, of characters, of forms liminal to the biological and the matter: all strong figures, an abstract group, united in some way by a primitive yet organic, impelling, redemptive quest for our senses to be triggered...
